10	EEC	The European Economic Community a group of European countries working together Britain was rejected from joining this in 1961.	 Globalisation. As technology in travel and communication improved the world moved closer. This meant it was easier for trade and migration than ever before. It also made it easier for different countries to work together in a strategic union such as the ECC (EU). Multiculturalism. Britain's proud history as a liberal democracy meant it was accepting of many groups of migrants. Unfortunately, this also caused a backlash to some of the Caribbean and Asian immigration after WW2.
11	'Sus' Law	The suspicion law allowed police to stop and search anyone who might commit a crime, Black youths were searched a lot more than other groups and caused rioting in 1981.
12	Mandate System	After the war ended Britain East was asked to take colonial control over areas in the Middle East.

15	Referend um	A vote in which all eligible people are asked to give their opinion of or decide on an important political or social issue.	Decolonisation At the beginning of the Century European Powers controlled most of the world in colonial empires. Britain had the largest empire in the world in 1900 but by 1960 had lost almost all of its colonies. The independence of India, loss of Kenya and Ghana and the Suez Canal Crisis can all be seen as part of this decolonisation. The Second World War was key in this as it weakened Britain, showed the bravery of those in the colonies, and proved white invincibility was a myth.
16	Multicultu ral	The idea that people of different cultural groups and ethnic backgrounds can create a diverse successful society by keeping their culture and sharing with others.
17	Dominon Status	Power given to a British colony thay enabled people to have a lot of internal authority in its government.
18	Passive resistance	Protesting for change by refusing to co-operate with the rulers in charge without using force.
